The fewer hangs up while finishing this list of "snags," the sooner everyone can make their money and move onto the next project. Luckily, putting together a comprehensive punch list doesn't have to be rocket science.Using a punch listThe idea behind a punch list is very simple: The owner or owner's representative (often an architect or designer) walks through a project as it nears completion. This person takes notes of all the issues, damage, mistakes, and other items that don't meet the plans. The representative enters the issues into the punch list template by number, with a brief description and the location of the snag.This punch list then goes to the GC or project manager, and that person divvies the work up between the appropriate subcontractors.The subs then handle the tasks assigned to them, notifying the GC or project manager when they're complete.Once punch work is done, you'll likely submit the completed list with your final payment application. Out to out and in to in the method4. If you are using the Google Sheets or Excel versions of the template, the calculation formulas are already included.Enter estimated costs for each line item on a residential project and calculate the per square foot cost for soft costs/general conditions, site work, building construction, and overhead and profit.Compare total estimated costs with actual costs to date for each line item on a construction project and summarized for soft costs/general conditions, site work, building construction, and overhead and profit.Enter estimated costs for each line item on a commercial project and calculate the per square foot cost for soft costs/general conditions, site work, building construction, and overhead and profit.Tips for creating an accurate construction budgetAccurate take-offHaving accurate takeoffs for the amount of work required for a project is key to providing an accurate budget. Construction estimate template excel is essential for calculating quantities of materials. P. Tools like construction estimating and electronic take-off software can make quantifying the work easier and more exact.Before you automatically choose the lowest subcontractor bid, make sure you are reviewing them carefully.Not all subs bid the same scope of work, and taking a low bid that's missing part of the project won't give you an accurate number. Building Estimation is also beneficial for passing tenders. However, if you want the do it manually, it is necessary to simplify the whole estimation method into small parts and begin from foundation. Verify that all formulas are working and that all the required amounts are included before submitting your budget.
